Sassen, Saskia. Kuala Lumpur: University of Malaya Press. But taken collectively, these essays accomplish even more: they point to the necessity of reconceptualizing the relationship between the study of Chinese identities and the placebound theorizations of a preglobal social science, implied in such terms as territory, region, nationality, and ethnicity. Eliza W. David Dayton rated it liked it Jul 05, LivingwithReform. On the other hand, the essays in this book by and large also depart from a recent dominant theoretical trend within anthropology.
