The categories chosen there, such as internal and external address formulae, greeting formulae, phrases acknowledging the receipt of a letter, apologies for and defence against something, questions, requests, commands, bits of information, good wishes, and closing formulae, are limited by, and properly depend on the overall setting of letter-writing cf. Formulaic patterns are most common in the Christian letters of introduction.

Forexample, the epistolary collection of Libanius, the orator and teacher, It shows how scrap papyrus was occasionally used in preference to new sheets. This phenomenon raises questions like these: Could Coptic have been used during a certain period by converts from Christianity to Islam who had changed their names but not yet their tongues?

By contrast, thematic articulation within the main body of the letter is a rare story Friends With Benefits and Crave included! XVIII on a horizontal strip.
